United Airlines Flight 93 was a Boeing 757-222 passenger jet which was allegedly hijacked by four al-Qaeda terrorists on September 11, 2001. It crashed into a field in Stonycreek Township, near Shanksville in Somerset County at over 500MPH during a failed attempt by some of the passengers to re-take control. All 40 people aboard plus the hijackers are said to have perished in the crash, but none of the bodies were found at the crash site. All human remains were found within a 70-acre area surrounding the impact point. The only human body part he could see at the crash site was part of a backbone. He later found and identified 1,500 pieces of human remains totaling about 600 pounds or eight percent of the total. The rest of the remains were allegedly consumed by the impact. Investigators found some very light debris including paper and nylon scattered up to eight miles from the impact point in New Baltimore, Pennsylvania. Other tiny aircraft fragments were found 1.5 miles away at Indian Lake, Pennsylvania. (read the Wikipedia article)

The large debris field (8 miles) and lack of major aircraft components such as engines and landing gear at the crash site is indicia of a mid-air explosion, not a high-speed nose-first crash as we are led to believe by the official government story.

Also, there are inconsistencies with air-to-ground communications - specifically a call which is said to have been made by a passenger with a cellular phone, which leads us to believe that there is something more to this story than government officials would have us believe.

Would the US Government order the shoot-down of a passenger jet? All you need to know to answer that question is to read the Northwoods Document.
